BASEMENT

Colourmeinkindness is the second studio album released by English rock band Basement. Recording took place at The Panda Studios in Fremont, California. Sam Pura produced the recordings and also engineered and mixed them. Mastering was handled by T W Walsh. Prior to the album’s release, the band announced on July 19, 2012 that they were going on hiatus. In said announcement, the group revealed that the hiatus was “[d]ue to a number of personal commitments”. On September 10, 2012, “Spoiled” was made available for streaming. It was released on October 23, 2012 through Run for Cover Records. In mid-November, the band played their final shows, prior to their 2014 reunion. Despite the lack of press coverage or live dates to support it, the album has since sold over 25,000 copies worldwide.

BASEMENT

Basement are an English rock band formed in 2009 in Ipswich. They went on hiatus following their This Is Goodbye tour in November 2012. On January 29, 2014, the band announced in a post on their Facebook page that they would be reuniting. Also on that day a tweet was posted on the band's Twitter account simply saying "Hi", and the dates "2008-2012" were removed from their Twitter and Facebook biographies, suggesting the band had returned from their hiatus. The band posted on Facebook later that day confirming that the hiatus was over as well as suggesting that there would be a summer tour.

In June 2014, the band announced that they had secretly recorded a new EP for release in July of that year, entitled Further Sky including two new songs, plus a cover of Suede's "Animal Nitrate". The band toured across Australia, Japan and America between July 26 and
